Personal Manifesto

I never fully know how I work, but that is okay, because not knowing is what excites me.

I do not know what motivates me, I do not always know what interests me, and I do not always know what will discourage me, but I do know that each new day can be an adventure where I can discover new things about myself and experiment with what will work and not.

I know that I have never failed at overcoming a problem in one way or another. And I know that I would not want to change any choice, mistake or success.

I like collecting things. Photos, audio and video clips, little trinkets I find, concert tickets, notes and so on, and I think I like it because I imagine all these things together contribute in building a representation of who I am, and who I have been, where every little thing has a role to play.

If I can live my life imagining that each little experience, every little new piece of information I learn, is something I collect, and that will contribute to a larger sum, then every day will be an adventure.
